

Bill Bullock, Leadership Memphis Class of 2003 alum, recently retired from Memphis Light, Gas and Water. In his 35-year career, Bullock had responsibilities in engineering, energy purchasing and risk management, customer service, energy conservation, economic development and sustainability.

“I had a great career at MLGW, but it was time to move on,” said Bullock. Soon after retirement, he joined Entegriy Partners, an energy services company headquartered in Little Rock, AR.

“For much of my career, I made a lot of suggestions to local companies of the things they can do to save energy. In my new role, I will have the opportunity not only to make the recommendations, but with the Entegriy team, offer turnkey solutions with guaranteed results.”

Bullock also noted that recent innovations in LED lighting technology have made conversions from fluorescent lighting a very attractive investment for operators of commercial property.

“I am spending more time on my hobbies like boating, music, golf, fitness and community work, but I knew I wanted to stay involved in trying to make the Memphis community more sustainable. My new role with Entegriy allows me to have a really good balance of doing positive things for my family and me, as well as positive things for the community.”
